Draft of Emergency Powers Continuation Act

JOINT RESOLUTION

2 the national emergency proclaimed December 16, 1950 notwithstanding the
3 termination of the existing state of war.

4 WHEREAS, the existing state of war with Japan is the last declared state
5 of war to which the United States is a party and the termination thereof
6 and of the national emergencies proclaimed in 1939 and 1941 would render 7 certain statutory provisions inoperative; and

9 national security and the capacity of the United States to support the United
10 Nations in its efforts to establish and maintain world peace:

11 Now, therefore, be it

COMMENT ON ALTERNATIVE VERSIONS OF SECTION 2(a)

Section 2(a) states the construction to be placed on a number of specific words and phrases presupposing the existence of a state of war when there is no longer a state of war, - for example "ally", "enemy" "prisoner of war" and "interned in a neutral country".

Differing suggestions have been made as to the best manner of dealing with these terms in the bill as applied to a situation in which there is no longer a state of war. The differences are as to:

(a) Whether or not the terms "ally", "enemy" and "neutral" ("interned in a neutral country") shall apply only as determined by the President in each case in accordance with standards to be stated in the bill, or whether, instead, there should be a definition in the bill, with no provision for Presidential determination, or whether there should be a combination of the two, namely, a definition accompanied by a provision for wider application by determinations of the President in accordance with a standard which should serve to broaden their application.

(b) The specific meaning to be given to certain other terms when there is no longer a state of war.

(c) Which other terms should be specifically dealt with in the bill.

Three versions of section 2(a) are therefore presented here.

The first version has these features: (a) As to "ally", "enemy" and "neutral" ("interned in a neutral country"), it gives no definition but provides for their determination by the President in particular cases in accordance with a standard stated in the bill; (b) It defines four other terms (or groups of terms) presupposing the existence of a state of war.

The second version has these features: (a) It defines "ally" and "enemy" (and their equivalents) without any provision for Presidential determination. (b) It specifically defines some but not all of the other terms presupposing the existence of a state of war. Among those not defined is "neutral".

The third version is a combination of the other two. (a) As to "ally", "enemy" and "neutral", it provides a definition (but narrower than that in the first version) and it also provides for Presidential determination, in accordance with a standard, in cases not falling within the definition. (b) It defines the four other groups of terms (omitted from the second version) presupposing the existence of a state of war, using for these the definitions of the first version.

The versions calling for Presidential determinations necessitate the inclusion of section 2(c), which is superfluous for the other version. It is assumed that the President will be free to delegate the making of determinations.

Opinions are particularly desired as to which of these versions is preferred, taking account of the differing practical purposes which the statutes in question are desired to serve. It will be of particular value if you will test these three versions by applying them to the varying factual situations which might arise under the provisions with which you are concerned.

The proponents of a Presidential determination say:

- (a) Under any fixed definition there will be great doubt as to what the terms "ally", "enemy" and "neutral" mean in particular cases.
- (b) Someone will have to resolve the doubt administratively for the purpose of applying the provision in particular cases.
- (c) If authority is granted to the President to make determinations he can coordinate the applications of these terms by the various agencies concerned; he can make decisions in advance, when needed; and possible conflict within the Executive Branch and between the Executive Branch, the General Accounting Office and the courts will be reduced.
- (d) The possibility of embarrassment in international relations as a result of the determinations will be minimized because the President will be free to delegate the authority to make determinations (subject to such supervision as he may wish to apply); the determinations will be made for specific narrow purposes; and the actual wording of the determination need not include the words "ally", "enemy" or "neutral".
- (e) Some of these terms occur in penal provisions to which due-process requirements of certainty apply.

The proponents of a fixed definition, with no provision for Presidential determination, say:

- (a) The provision for Presidential determination will cause embarrassment to the President and the Government.
- (b) A fixed definition will have a reasonably clear application in most cases and therefore there is no real need to provide for Presidential determinations, considering the embarrassments which they might lead to.

(d) For the purpose of section 1 of the Act of May 29, 1945, ch. 135, 59 Stat. 225, as amended (31 U.S.C. 222c), and for the purpose of section 2 of the Act of December 28, 1945, ch. 597, 59 Stat. 662 (31 U.S.C. 222e), the date of termination of a time of war and the establishment of peace shall be the date which the President shall prescribe for those purposes, notwithstanding any other termination of war or establishment of peace.

(e) For the purpose of section 1 of the Act of July 3, 1943, ch. 189, 57 Stat. 372, as amended (31 U.S.C. 223b), and for the purpose of section 1 of the Act of December 28, 1945, ch. 597, 59 Stat. 662 (31 U.S.C. 223d), the date of the termination of a time of war and the establishment of peace shall, with respect to accidents or incidents occurring after June 23, 1950, be the date which the President shall prescribe for those purposes, notwithstanding any other termination of war or establishment of peace.
